

Maintaining a home emergency preparedness kit is the best way to prepare for an emergency, such as severe weather or pandemic flu.

- It's easy to assemble your kit and customize it for your family's needs. There are many items in your household already.
- Simply review the checklist, determine which items you already have, and identify the items you still need.
- Spread out the cost by buying a few items each time you visit your local Wal-Mart or Sam's Club locations.
- Your kit should contain the basic essentials for each family member, including fresh water, nonperishable food and medical supplies.
- Start by collecting a three-day supply of the consumables, such as food, water and medication. Once you have gathered your three-day supply, start toward a three-week supply.
- Keep your kit in a dry location that is easily accessible. For portability, store your items in a large plastic container or new trash can with lid, suitcase, duffle bag, backpack or footlocker.
- Set up a schedule to evaluate, rotate and replenish your kit every six months.

Be ready.
Be informed.
Be healthy.

- More than half of all Americans are not prepared for emergencies.
- Most say they do not think a public health crisis is likely, but our country has experienced three pandemic flu outbreaks in the last century. The 1918 pandemic killed 675,000 people in the U.S. alone.
- Pandemics are unpredictable. And as history has shown us, another pandemic is not a matter of if, but a matter of when.
- The more familiar seasonal flu causes nearly 1,000 hospitalizations in Colorado each year.
- Staying healthy is one of the most important ways to be prepared for a public health emergency.
- Preventing respiratory illnesses like colds and flu is relatively simple:
 - Wash your hands
 - Cover your coughs and sneezes
 - Get a seasonal flu vaccination every year
- During a disease outbreak such as pandemic flu, it could become important to stay home and avoid large groups of people where germs could spread.
- If you are prepared to stay home to wait out a pandemic, you will be prepared for almost anything.
